

Taken alone, many elements of this expansive spa suite would merit a mention on our pages: the slate-tiled Endless swimming pool for helping its owner keep fit, the massive windows overlooking Rock Creek Park, and the strong, lean-lined influences of Frank Lloyd Wright (the home was designed by one of Wright's pupils). The fact that this space effortlessly combines all those elements – with a creative, eye-fooling reflection in the mirror, no less – makes it extraordinary. Sky-lit closets, heated floors, low-e windows and custom cabinetry add interest, and we especially love that it was designed with accessibility in mind so the owner can enjoy it for years without making major adjustments.

This is a tranquil space full of unusual, subtle gestures – misty green veining in the marble tub deck and countertops, a tasteful stripe of round glass tiles over the oversized tub – and then it goes big time with floor-to-ceiling views of a golf course. The architect designed the bath on an existing deck, and the owners' former bath was transformed into a dressing room. The open layout and the sophisticated deep brown of the cabinetry contribute to the "loft-like atmosphere."
